MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

FROM: Jeff Zients

SUBJECT: Daily Economic Briefing

Enclosed is the daily updated economic information from CEA and Treasury.

COUNCIL OF ECONOMIC ADVISERS
DAILY ECONOMIC BRIEFING
December 11, 2014

MANUFACTURING AND TRADE INVENTORIES

- The book value of non-automotive manufacturing and trade inventories rose $56 billion at an annual rate in October, according to data released today by the Census Bureau. The October figure was held down by a price-related decline in petroleum inventories held by refiners and wholesalers ($23 billion, or -3.1 percent). This decline in book-value petroleum inventories was more than accounted for by an 8.5 percent decline in refiners' acquisition costs. Excluding motor vehicles and petroleum, the October pace of book-value stockbuilding ($78 billion) exceeded the pace of the second and third quarters of the year. Revised inventory data for the third quarter can be expected to boost reported real GDP growth by 0.1 percentage point at an annual rate. With one month of available data for the fourth quarter, a small positive contribution from inventory investment to GDP growth appears likely.

  - The inventory-to-sales ratio for the manufacturing and trade sector as a whole was steady at a 1.3 month's supply for the third straight month in October, within the range observed in recent years (see chart). Although real inventory stocks have increased substantially, the increase appears to have been in line with sales.

Note: Real inventories for September and October are a CEA estimate based on Census book value data.
Source: Census Bureau; CEA calculations.

U.S. IMPORT AND EXPORT PRICES

- U.S. import and export prices fell 1.5 percent and 1.0 percent, respectively, in November, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Import prices have fallen for five consecutive months and this November were 2.3 percent lower than they were in November 2013. The November decline in import prices was the largest monthly decline seen since 2012. Export prices were 1.9 percent lower than they were in November 2013, and have fallen in every month since August.

- The decline in import prices was driven by the largest monthly decline in fuel prices since 2012. Fuel prices decreased by 6.7 percent in November, primarily due to a 6.9 percent decline in petroleum prices and a 4.6 percent decline in natural gas prices.

- The price index for nonfuel imports also decreased by 0.2 percent in November. Lower prices for nonfuel industrial supplies and materials fell by 0.9 percent, driven by a 2.1 percent decline in the price of unfinished metals, mostly gold and other precious metals. Prices for foods, feeds, and beverages, and each of the major finished goods categories also contributed due to drops in prices of fish and shellfish, coffee, consumer goods and automotive vehicles, and capital goods.

- By locality of origin, lower fuel prices were largely responsible for the decline in overall import price indexes for Canada, the European Union, and Mexico. Price indexes for imports from China were unchanged in November, and edged down only slightly for Japan (0.1 percent).

- Lower prices for nonagricultural exports more than offset the rise in agricultural export prices. After falling 10 percent over the last five months, prices for agricultural exports increased by 0.5 percent in November. The increase is attributed to higher prices for soybeans, corn, and wheat. The price index for nonagricultural exports, by contrast, decreased 1.2 percent in November, primarily due to a 3.2 percent decrease in the price of nonagricultural industrial supplies and materials, and a 0.3 percent decline in the price of consumer goods.

- In November, import air passenger fares rose 1.0 percent, while export air passenger fares fell 4.9 percent, led by changes in European fares. Meanwhile, import air freight prices declined 0.5 percent and export air freight prices decreased 0.3 percent.

FINANCIAL ACCOUNTS OF THE UNITED STATES

- Household net worth – the difference between the value of a household's assets and debts – fell by $140 billion (0.2 percent) in the third quarter of 2014, to $81.3 trillion, according to the Federal Reserve Board's Financial Accounts of the United States. This slight decrease in household net worth owes mostly to an uptick in total liabilities. Since its trough in 2009:Q1, household net worth has risen by $26.4 trillion.

  - The value of assets held by households and nonprofit institutions fell by $20 billion (less than 0.1 percent) in the third quarter. The decline in the value of corporate equities and mutual funds owned by households was offset by an increase in the value of real estate holdings, deposits, and noncorporate business equity.

  - Household and nonprofit liabilities increased by $121 billion (0.9 percent). This rise was led by growth in consumer credit, with mortgage debt contributing as well.

  - Average real net worth per household is now just shy of full recovery, at less than 0.3 percent below its pre-recession peak. The data included in the Financial Accounts reflect aggregate household net worth and thus do not reflect the disparities across households.

- Net new lending by U.S.-chartered depository institutions (including commercial banks and savings institutions, but excluding credit unions) and the U.S. branches of foreign banks increased at an annual rate of $533 billion in the third quarter of 2014. Although below the increase seen in the second quarter, the rate of net new lending remains strongly positive (see chart below).

- U.S. defined benefit pension plans are underfunded by a total of $3.2 trillion, with a funding shortfall of 28.1 percent. The present value of defined benefit pension entitlements amounted to $11.4 trillion, while the value of assets currently held by defined benefit pension funds was only $8.2 trillion. Note that the magnitude of the shortfall is sensitive to assumptions regarding the rate used to discount future pension obligations.

- Global equity markets were mostly higher today after U.S. retail sales surprised to the upside and lower-than-expected take-up of the European Central Bank's (ECB) second Targeted Long-Term Refinancing Operation (TLTRO) heightened investor expectations for the ECB to broaden asset purchases next month (more below). The S&P 500 rose 0.5%, the Euro Stoxx rose 0.3%, and the Nikkei declined 0.9%. Ten-year Treasury yields were unchanged at 2.17%, and the dollar was 0.6% stronger against a basket of major currencies.
- European equities rose and the euro depreciated after demand for the ECB's second TLTRO disbursement this morning was slightly less than the €150 billion analysts had expected, with banks demanding only €130 billion. Recall that the TLTRO provides long-term loans at low interest rates from the ECB to euro area banks in hopes of stimulating lending to small and medium sized enterprises. Investors now expect the ECB to announce an expansion of its asset purchase program to possibly include sovereign and corporate bond purchases at its meeting in late January in order to help the ECB expand its balance sheet back to levels reached in early 2012.
- Russian equities fell 2.1% and the ruble depreciated 1.6% against the dollar despite the Central Bank of Russia's (CBR) decision to raise its benchmark interest rate by 100 basis points to 10.5%. The central bank also emphasized that its commitment to limiting inflationary pressures was the main driver behind today's rate hike. The central bank now expects inflation to reach "around 10%" by the end of the year, and for Russian GDP to expand by only 0.6% in 2014. The CBR believes that the ruble is currently 10-20% weaker than its fundamental value, and that speculators have contributed to almost half of this devaluation. Data released this morning also showed that Russia's reserves fell by $4.3 billion last week, the largest weekly decline since early November.

U.S.: U.S. equities rallied after the release of stronger-than-expected retail sales data for November and despite an increase in continuing jobless claims. Retail sales rose 0.7% month-over-month in November, significantly outpacing the 0.3% growth in October and beating analyst expectations for a reading of 0.4%. This notable gain led some investors to speculate that lower oil prices have increased U.S. consumer confidence. Separately, although weekly initial jobless claims data fell in line with expectations, declining to 294,000, continuing claims unexpectedly rose by 142,000 last week.

Japan: Japanese equities declined and the yen weakened against the dollar after the disappointing release of Japanese machinery orders data and amid the decline of a widely followed index of service sector activity. Japanese machine orders declined 6.4% year-over-year in October, well below September's 2.9% gain, and underperforming expectations for only a 1.7% contraction. The tertiary industry index, which measures service sector activity, fell 1.2 percentage points in October to a reading of -0.2%, pointing to a weaker growth outlook for the fourth quarter.

China: Although Chinese equities declined overnight, market participants noted a press report indicating that the People's Bank of China (PBoC) is currently injecting additional liquidity into the Chinese economy. The article indicated that the PBoC's $65 billion liquidity injection is aimed at encouraging bank lending in order to stimulate economic growth. Nevertheless, market participants continue to expect Chinese economic growth to decelerate over the next two years from 7.4% in 2014 to 7.0% and 6.7% in 2015 and 2016, respectively. Also, media reports cited Chinese currency intervention to bolster the renminbi in recent trading as more investors bet on upcoming depreciation.
