Thanks!

Jim,

I need your help to identify the right person/s in the White House who would be interested in an advance look at our "Foreign Direct Investment Confidence Index" survey of global 1000 CEOs. This is the survey the President acknowledged in his State of the Union address this year as validating the US recovery inasmuch as the US resumed the number 1 ranking among investment destinations in the world after having lost that coveted spot to China a decade ago. This year's result, which we will release on 2 June, even more convincingly affirms that the US now has resumed its competitive edge in the minds of the world's most important investors. The FDI Confidence Index has for 18 years been widely regarded as the leading indicator of likely future foreign direct investment flows.

Gene Sperling also cited last year's result on Meet the Press as has Secretary Pritzker on many public occasions. I wanted to be sure this time the Administration has the advantage of having the results in advance of our release so they can optimize the coverage of this positive message for the US.

I should have an advance copy of our release and a summary of the results later today that I can forward to you or whomever you direct me to. I was hoping that a colleague and I could go brief the White House on this result next Thursday morning, May 22, the only day I will be in DC before we release our report on 2 June.

Thanks for your help on this, Jim.

Best.

Paul
