Follow, Share, and Learn

Did you know there are many ways to learn about what's happening at the National Archives?

The National Archives uses social media platforms to tell great stories, spark deep conversations, and provide opportunities for civic engagement. Through social media, we present content from across the offices of the National Archives with the goal of sharing our mission and connecting with more people than ever before. To demonstrate the power of that reach, last year we received more than 168 million views on our social media platforms.

Through any of our social platforms, we can give people the information they need to learn from the past, to ensure their rights, to hold their government accountable, and to participate in the civic process.

Discover more about our records and events on our Facebook page, join the conversation on Twitter, go behind the scenes on Instagram, and much more.

Interested to know what happened on this day in history? Check out Today's Document on Tumblr, featuring documents from today in history from the holdings of the U.S. National Archives.

With more than 130 accounts on 15 different platforms sharing records and information from across the National Archives, including Presidential Libraries, Education, Preservation, Special Media and more, you're sure to find something you love.

We hope you'll join us.

Sunshine Week Transcription Challenge: Mission Accomplished!

In our last newsletter we challenged you to help transcribe FOIA, Special Access and declassified records to help celebrate open government, accountability and access to public information. You rose to the challenge and transcribed an amazing 1,190 pages!

Here are the top 20 contributors to tagging and transcription since our last newsletter. Did you break into the top 20?

Image Challenge

In April 2017, we will be commemorating the Centennial of the United States' entry into World War I. As we prepare for this anniversary, we are browsing the wealth of World War I photos and documents at the National Archives. For this week's image challenge, can you identify this celebrity who entertained the crowd in a 1918 Liberty Loan Drive during World War I?

Click on the image from the recently digitized series American Unofficial Collection of World War I Photographs, 1917 - 1918 to see if your guess is correct!
