Washington, DC – November 16, 2012 – The Foundation for the National Archives presented its first Heritage Award to philanthropist Jacqueline Badger Mars Tuesday November 13, at the Foundation’s annual black-tie gala. The event was chaired by David M. Rubenstein.

Presenting sponsor was AT&T Services, Inc., with special thanks to the Maris S. Cuneo Foundation and the Eliasberg Family Foundation, Inc.

The Heritage Award takes its name from the “Heritage” sculpture outside the National Archives Building and recognizes individuals, corporations, and organizations whose deeds are consistent with the Foundation’s mission of educating, enriching, and inspiring a deeper appreciation of our country’s heritage through the collected evidence of its history.

A lifelong businesswoman, philanthropist, and advocate for women’s education, Jacqueline Mars was honored for her support of the National Archives as well as other arts and cultural institutions in Washington, DC.

“We are so excited to present Jacquie with our first Heritage Award,” said Foundation President A’Lelia Bundles, who presented the award along with Archivist of the United States David S. Ferriero. “We are inspired by Jacquie’s personal passion for history and her commitment to preserving documents, books, and artifacts that celebrate our nation’s heritage.”

“Jaqueline Mars shares our passion for making historical records available to the public and preserving them for future generations,” said Ferriero. “She, along with the entire Mars family and Mars, Incorporated, inspire us to continue the important work of increasing historical awareness and improving civic education in our country and around the world.”

The Foundation’s annual gala, which includes the awards ceremony in the Archives’ William G. McGowan Theater and an elegant seated dinner in the Rotunda Galleries, celebrates the public-private partnership between the National Archives and its nonprofit partner, the Foundation for the National Archives.

The WPAS Children of the Gospel Choir, a favorite of the honoree, opened the awards ceremony with a performance of “America the Beautiful” and “Ain’t No Mountain High Enough.”

In addition to remarks by the Archivist, Bundles, and Rubenstein, the awards ceremony featured a videotaped tribute by Former First Lady and current Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, who praised Jacqueline Mars’ philanthropic efforts as well as Mars, Incorporated’s work around the globe, calling the company “a shining example of corporate social responsibility.”

“As the State Department works to promote U.S. business overseas, we need more corporate ambassadors like Mars,” Clinton said. “They strengthen the American brand, creating export opportunities for American products and making American firms the most sought after employers in the world.”

In 2011, Jacqueline Mars, along with Mars, Incorporated, supported the National Archives Experience exhibition “What’s Cooking, Uncle Sam?”

As Chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Washington National Opera, Mars also played an instrumental role in the merging of the Opera with the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts. She also serves as Vice Chairman on the Board of Directors of the National Sporting Library and Museum in Middleburg, Virginia, which is dedicated to preserving and promoting equestrian and field sports. The museum boasts an international fellowship program and an impressive collection of more than 24,000 books and works of art.

Mars also supports the National Museum of American History, and her family has supported the Air and Space Museum, Colonial Williamsburg, Fort Ticonderoga, Mount Vernon, the National Zoo, the American Prairie Foundation, and other historic and cultural institutions in Washington and around the country.

The Foundation also salutes the entire Mars family and Mars, Incorporated for their commitment to preserving and protecting our nation’s history. Mars, Incorporated’s Historic Division educates its consumers on the history of chocolate during the Colonial and post-Revolutionary periods, while the company’s Cocoa Genome Mapping project works to improve the lives of cocoa farmers in countries around the world. Through such initiatives, Mars is setting an example for other corporations and organizations to increase historical awareness and improve people’s livelihood.

Thora Colot, Executive Director of the Foundation for the National Archives, expressed admiration: “Mars’ continual efforts to reach out and assist small, medium, and large cultural and historical institutions to engage directly with visitors by providing presentations and samplings of its historic chocolate help to captivate and educate guests and to encourage them to explore more.”

Jacqueline Mars retired from Mars, Incorporated in 2001, but continues to serve as a Director of the company. A lifelong lover of animals, Mars now owns a working farm specializing in organic farming and equine training, supports the United States Olympic Equestrian Team, and serves on the Board of Trustees of the United States Equestrian Team Foundation. She was accompanied Tuesday evening by many members of the Mars family.

In addition to the Archivist and his wife Gail Zimmermann, Bundles and Fred Cooke, and Rubenstein, the exclusive event drew distinguished guests from the civic and cultural community. Among them were Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg, Foundation Board member Peter Cuneo and his wife Maris S. Cuneo, and past presidents of the Foundation Ken Lore and wife Pat, Tom Wheeler and wife Carol, and Larry O'Brien. Gov. James Blanchard, also a Foundation board and Society for the National Archives member, and his wife Janet also attended as did Board and Society members Mary Lynn Kotz, Richard Eliasberg, Riley Temple, Molly Moynihan, Bill Harman and his wife Mary Love Harman, John Zentay and his wife Diana, and the Foundation's Executive Director Thora Colot.
