GENERAL WILLIAM J. DONOVAN
SELECTED OSS DOCUMENTS, 1941-1945
MICROFILM ROLL LIST AND INDEX
RECORD GROUP 226
ENTRY 180

On September 20, 1945, despite the efforts of General William Donovan, President Truman issued an executive order (E.O. 9621) terminating the OSS, effective 1 October. In the few days remaining to the agency, General Donovan ordered Lt. Edwin J. Putzell to assist him in microfilming select documents from Donovan's safe files for his own action and personal use. Donovan and Putzell worked, under pressure of time, with a Kodak Recordak Camera to produce 131 rolls of 35 mm microfilm from the records of the Donovan files. Due to haste, the quality of the microfilm was poor and the records often misarranged. In addition, Donovan also obtained for his own use 62 rolls of 16 mm microfilm of select cable files. The cable files had been microfilmed by the OSS Communications Branch, which had produced a comparatively readable film copy of its own R and C traffic. After the war, Donovan stored the 193 rolls of microfilm at the offices of the law firm of Donovan Leisure Newton and Irvine in the Rockefeller Plaza in New York.

When William Donovan died in 1959, Otto C. Doering took charge of his papers. A member of Donovan's law firm since 1935, Doering had served as Executive Officer in the OSS Washington Director's Office. Doering allowed the historian Anthony Cave Brown, who was planning to write a biography of Donovan, to see the microfilm as early as 1977-78. At Doering's death in 1979, his wife returned the 193 rolls of microfilm to the law firm, which passed them on to Brown.

In 1982, Brown gave the microfilm to William Donovan's son, David, who transferred the microfilm, along with some 100 cubic feet of Donovan's textual records, to the U.S. Army Military Historical Institute at Carlisle Barracks. When the Department of the Navy made a diazo copy of the microfilm in the possession of Carlisle Barracks, the Central Intelligence Agency was informed in accordance with Executive Order 12356. The CIA then obtained the Donovan Files microfilm for security review. After completing its review, the CIA provided Carlisle Barracks and the National Archives with sanitized copies.

At least four sets of the Donovan Files microfilm are known to have existed:

1. Donovan estate set - the original 193 rolls taken by General Donovan in 1945.

2. G. Edward Buxton - destroyed
3. CIA set
4. Churchill College, Cambridge University set - Mr. Brown allowed Churchill College to copy parts of the microfilm relating to Britain and Europe.

The Donovan Files microfilm may include material found in Record Group 226. It seems likely the microfilm duplicates at least some of the records in the files of the OSS Washington Director's Office or the OSS cable files such as those in RG 226, Entries 88, 121 and 134.
