Preliminary Survey:

Due to the inadequacy of the submitted material, only tentative summarizing statements can be made.

Summarizing Statements:

The writer is evidently a reserved and careful person who attends to his affairs in a rather deliberate manner. He possesses a good intelligence (not brilliant), is well educated and professionally trained. He has thoroughly absorbed the material he has read and studied and knows how to utilize it in a purposeful manner. His way of thinking is clear, logical and fairly adaptable. He apparently is anxious to learn new things and to widen his horizon. He has some intellectual ambitions, but the emphasis of his interests is in the practical sphere. He does not possess much originality, but he identifies himself with well-selected patterns which may let him appear more sophisticated than he actually is. He discards unnecessary and superfluous material, but he may not discern the vital points in more intricate and unfamiliar problems unless properly pointed out to him. He is a careful observer of small details which he correlates properly to their larger aspects within his familiar frame of reference. He combines a certain amount of imagination with sober-mindedness and matter-of-factness. He tries to expedite his work, but he is not likely to sacrifice accuracy to expediency. His critical faculties are well developed and he evaluates by rather set standards. Also, he is not likely to voice his criticism openly as he tends to avoid open controversies. Within the area of his knowledge and experience, he can exercise initiative and deal with the overall picture of a project. He has some understanding for mechanical functioning which may not be fully trained and exploited. He can figure and calculate and he has learned to think in larger terms and transactions. He is conservative in his calculations and he will make every possible effort to get along with the money and material at his disposal. Secretely, he would like to spend money freely and play the role of a big shot. He has some administrative abilities which he can exercise within a limited familiar area. In relation to this, he can work out the blueprint of a plan and supervise its proper execution. He is neat and orderly and he likes to arrange everything in a proper manner. He can take orders, follow prescribed rules and regulations and he will take care that people who work for him do the same. In the execution of his tasks, he is exact, conscientious and reliable. He is serious, methodical and systematic in his approach. He can express himself in an adequate form, verbally as well as in writing. He is able to present his material in a concise and understandable manner. He is not likely to say one word more than would be absolutely necessary, which is one of his customary precautions. He is a diligent worker who pursues his aims persistently and who does not rest until the last item of an assignment is completed. When necessary, he can muster a considerable amount of patience. His analyzing and synthesizing faculties are not particularly pronounced, but he has a way of figuring out the implications of the things he sees and hears and usually he comes to the correct conclusions. Being rather unassuming in his manners, people may, at times, underestimate his capabilities. He concentrates well on his work and at the same time, takes in everything that is going on around him and that could be of special interest to him. His memory functions precisely and he can reproduce easily remembered knowledge and information.

Emotionally, the writer is predominantly an introverted type who can join required extraverted professional and social activities without much emotional participation. With the aid of his strong capacity for identification, he blends in with his environment and avoids attracting special attention. While he is emotionally not very mature and individualized, he is fairly well equilibrated, composed and poised. He has his feelings and impulses under the strictest rational control and he is not likely to be carried away by them. His Ego-feelings are much stronger than most people who deal with him would suspect. He is rather confident of himself and inwardly may even consider himself quite superior to others. There is almost some impertinence in his inner attitude which helps him to assert himself and make his claims known in various indirect ways. He is not quite as harmless as he may appear and he knows exactly what he is after. He proceeds with great carefulness and precaution and he is quite clever in anticipating possible dangers. His self-defensive and self-protective mechanisms are strongly developed and he is most secretive about his affairs. He is not likely to confide completely in anybody. Unnoticed, he keeps up a strong personal reserve preventing others from coming too close to him. He is ego-centered and somewhat selfish and he will not lose sight of his personal advantage in whatever he is doing. He has developed a colorless and consistent facade which may serve as a cover for various activities he wants to hide. If he considers it necessary, he can be quite versatile and he is able to make quick changes and switches. In a closer relationship, he can be rather enigmatic and he may surprise by unexpected actions and reactions. He is guided by some ideological system (most likely of collective nature) with its fundamental ethical principles which he follows meticulously on the surface. In reality, he uses a number of camouflaging capacities (in a well-calculated and skillful manner) for professional and social purposes. He is emotionally so detached, that it is doubtful if he has any deep-going allegiance. Suggestions in line with his self-centered interests could have a strong appeal for him and possibly could alter his motivations. At the same time, he should be very difficult to approach, especially, as he is somewhat unpredictable. He is emotionally rather strained, but he evidently has sufficient strength and energy at present to support his general functioning adequately. He possesses a rather strong willpower and sufficient power of resistance to withstand physical as well as emotional pressure. He apparently has steeled himself in the course of his life, and he can become quite numb when he wants to. He is a rather peculiar person who can be very puzzling at times.

Summary:

The writer is a competent and meticulous worker in his professional field. Behind a harmless front, he is an emotionally complex and shrewd individual who could very well be involved in some well-covered-up activities which are not part of his overt life. He is not consistent and reliable and one must be prepared for sudden changes in his reaction and action pattern.

Qualification:

This report must be evaluated as qualified information because the handwriting standards submitted for analysis are not adequate.
