Cuban Embassy in London since 5 March 1963, arrived in London from Paris on 13 January 1964. TAMAYO was born on 28 October 1941 in Habana, Cuba, and carried Cuban passport D-126/63 issued in Habana on 20 January 1963.

3. A sensitive and reliable source, in a report dated 13 March 1964, reported that Rogelio TAMAYO Sanchez was one of the Cuban delegates to the United Nations Economic Development Conference scheduled for 23 March to 15 June 1964, in Geneva.
4. A fairly reliable source in a report dated 12 May 1964, stated that Rogelio TAMAYO Sanchez was a member of the Cuban Sugar Commission in Europe who represented Cuba at a Sugar Conference in Budapest from 20 to 24 April 1964.
5. In a 28 May 1964 report it was stated that Rogelio TAMAYO Sanchez, Cuban Commercial Attache in London, would attend a meeting in Paris on 30 May 1964 which was reported to be in aid of opening an international market of white sugar.
6. In July 1964 a Cuban refugee who was a high-level Cuban government commercial representative in the Western Hemisphere and whose bonafides were established on the basis of preliminary interviews and debriefings, said that he met Rogelio TAMAYO in MINCEX in early 1962 when TAMAYO was the Assistant Manager of Economics in Cubazucar. In late 1952 or early 1963 TAMAYO was assigned to London where he worked with Juan PERIS as a representative for Cubazucar. Source believed that TAMAYO represented other MINCEX enterprises, but was not certain which ones. Prior to TAMAYO's assignment to London, he made frequent trips to Communist countries. Source described TAMAYO as having been born about 1937, being five feet nine inches tall, 140 pounds, white, having black, curly hair, light brown eyes, and acne marks on his face. He liked to call himself "El Caballo."
