---------------	--	--------------------------	--------------------

PART F
IMPLEMENTATION OF SYSTEMATIC SAMPLES

A sample of cases consists of a relatively small number of records selected from a larger number in such a way that accurate generalizations about the larger collection of cases can be derived from the characteristics of the sampled cases. This records disposition schedule provides for systematic samples, based on a specified numerical ratio and involve a sample size, a sampling ratio, and a random begin point. For example, class X has 11,595 cases and the sample size is 2,500. The sample ratio is obtained by dividing the sample size (2500) into the total number of cases (11,595) and equals 4.6. The random begin point always lies between 1 and the sampling ratio. A table of random numbers will be consulted to determine this random begin point. If the begin point is 3, then the first case file to be selected is 3 and every fifth case file would be selected until a total of 2500 cases are identified. The random number start should be changed each time after 20 percent of the sample has been selected. Any random number between the begin point and the sampling ratio can be selected.

This disposition schedule provides for two types of systematic samples. Evidential samples are taken to document various policies, procedures, and investigative techniques adopted by the Bureau. Informational samples are taken to capture data on significant individuals, organizations, events or other topics which will be of interest to future researchers.

When preparing permanent records for transfer to the National Archives, the FBI will identify and segregate the sampled cases first. Any additional permanent records, such as multisection cases, will be separated only after the sample has been taken. Thus any multisection cases selected as part of the sample will remain a physical part of the sampled records.

	The following is a list of schedule items from Parts B and D that provides for either a systematic evidential or systematic informational sample of cases initiated before 1978.
